

What skills can graduates gain?

Through studying a degree in Anthropology, graduates develop a valuable set of skills and competencies. These can include:

- · Holistic and contextual understanding
- An appreciation of cultural diversity
- · Knowledge of cultural and ethnic changes,

What jobs and activities might graduates do?

Graduates with this degree are employed in a range of jobs — see some examples below.

S ca e eac e

- · Design and develop research projects
- Use a range of quantitative and qualitative methods to gain insight
- · Analyse and interpret data and findings
- · Write reports and briefings

Pcaa/ad

- Identify and investigate issues and opportunities e.g. in society, law or governance
- · Interpret and consult on existing policies
- · Prepare reports and recommend changes

Caea,eac eeace,daa

- Tailor products/services to people's needs
- Analyse human differences, appetite for change and interaction on behalf of a business
- Assess how culture can impact data and digital technologies (and vice versa)

A c ae

- · Preserve archaeological sites
- · Carry out excavations
- · Help restore monuments and sites

Lba a

- · Categorise and catalogue library materials
- · Select materials for library use
- · Help customers find and use materials

Ma e ce/aae

- · Collect and analyse market insights
- · Prepare and implement marketing plans
- Work with others to promote goods or services

M e ce

- Plan museum programmes
- Ensure security of oric 13.6P1uror servicappet(8.3appet

experience as it will enable you to experience